

THE EVENING STAR.

With Sunday Morning Edition.

WASHINGTON.

TUESDAY, June 26, 1906.

CROSBY S. NOYES, Editor.

THE STAR has a regular and permanent family circulation much more than the combined circulation of the other Washington dailies. As a News and Advertising Medium it has no competitor.

In order to avoid delays on account of personal absence, letters to THE STAR should not be addressed to any individual connected with the office, but simply to THE STAR, or to the Editorial or Business Departments, according to tenor of purpose.

The Sixtieth House.

For one reason or another, the members of the House will all be glad to get home. The man serving his first term and aspiring to a second is anxious. If he fails to get re-elected, he will have to go back to his private life. The man seeking a third or fourth term is almost as anxious, as he has had just enough of national politics to make him in love with the game. Even the man with the sure thing, whose constituents swear by him, and who is certain of re-election, has had his fill of law-making for one year, and longs for a rest and a hand-shaking tour of his district.

The election of a House of Representatives is always an interesting event. Everywhere people turn out to hear the issues discussed. If the candidate is not a speaker he is represented by speakers, who take the stump in his behalf and give reasons for sending him to Washington. No district is neglected. Many districts are so well cultivated that the campaign while it lasts overshadows everything else. Days and nights are given up to meetings, and marching clubs, and drum-beatings, and banner-waving, until by the time election day arrives voters are well nigh exhausted. A congressional contest is one of the most strenuous manifestations of our politics.

This year there are new wrinkles which will test the shrewdness and sagacity of even the most experienced campaigners. The people will want to hear about the railroad rate bill, and the meat inspection bill, and the latest developments in the matter of trusts, and particularly about the thousand and one rumors which have marked the passage of important measures through this Congress. Then there are the labor men, preparing at Mr. Gompers' suggestion to heckle candidates on labor issues, and to range themselves on the side of the man who makes the fairest promises and gives the best assurances of keeping them. Stumpers for themselves or for others will find it necessary in the approaching campaign to talk on new subjects, and many voters who have made a habit of thinking of making new party alignments. Nearly everybody is out, or getting out, of old ruts.

The Sixtieth Congress will assemble on the eve of the next presidential election, and will make some of the record upon which that contest will turn. Shall we see Mr. Cannon or Mr. Williams in the chair? And if the former, what will be the effect on the republican national convention?

Duty of Parents on July 4.

Excellent rules have been promulgated by the District authorities relative to the sale and use of explosives on Independence day, with the object of reducing the deaths and disabilities on that day. But despite all such precautions it is to be feared that the day will yield many accidents, as boys and men play with fire and powder and run useless risks in a foolish show of so-called patriotism.

The fathers and mothers of the boys of Washington can go a long way toward checking the evil and reducing the danger by refusing to give their sons money for fireworks. This may seem to some like a cruel hardship, but reflection will show its reasonableness and ultimate kindness. The thoughtful, wise parent can easily supervise his boy's Independence day "celebrating" if he will take the pains. The youngster must be supervised in his powder burning. There is no security in trusting to his judgment. He will find means to do foolish things if not watched through the day. Despite all the stringent laws and regulations some storekeepers will sell powder and big crackers and pistols and these secret sources of supply will be found by the youngsters with the same keenness of scent that they find dangerous swimming pools.

The man who goes off pleasureing on the Fourth of July and leaves his small boy to his own devices is simply risking the child's life. As the day's observance have degenerated there is no trusting the children to keep out of danger. A certain class of elders think it rare fun to give small boys powder and pistols and big crackers. Others take a fiendish delight in playing tricks upon little folks. These wretches are seldom caught and the only way to circumvent them is to safeguard the child through the day.

Members of the Russian douma are patterning after certain congressmen and calling people liars, but just to make the thing seem more genuine they are adding "assassin" to their vocabulary of abuse.

Speaker Cannon threw out some of the most wholesome bits in the public building pork barrel before he allowed it to be trucked into the House.

A murder is a poor way to solve a trouble.

Pork Bar's and Log-Rolling.

Once in a while the District longs for representation in Congress, just to get in on some of the log-rolling that enables the representatives of state districts to get their share of the appropriations in the big "pork-bar" bills. Everybody understands how these bills are worked through Congress. The member from the 25th New York, and the member from the 15th Iowa, and the one from the 15th Delaware and others combine in a game of "you tickle me and I'll tickle you." It is easy to swap votes on such a basis. The 25th New York gets a public building, and the 15th Delaware its bridge, and the 25th Iowa its river and harbor survey, and the others are allotted fat pieces of pork, and everything is as merry as a marriage bell.

But what the District gets comes by virtue of its urgent needs, when Congress can no longer ignore them, or when it chances to be in a particularly benevolent and liberal mood. No District man is on the floor to offer his vote for the New York building, or the Delaware bridge or the Iowa river survey in exchange for a local park or building or other project. The lobbyists of the two houses may be well filled with anxious citizens of Washington, with arguments and statistics, showing the need and the justice of a contemplated improvement, and committees may give solemn hearings to the advocates of the various works called for by the growth of the federal District. But even when they are gratified by the writing of these items into the bills they are apt to be later disappointed by their total elimination. There is no one to stand sponsor for them on the floor. The little deals and combinations of the log-rollers are protected by their assistants. They have no goods to deliver. However, justice will prevail in the end.

The District is gaining good friends at every session, and here and there in Congress are men who realize the urgent necessity of bringing the park system up to mark and equipping the national capital with public structures of proper size and style. These propositions have merit and are eventually considered on their merits. It may not be possible always to find much justice in the claim of the 25th New York, of the 25th Iowa or the 15th Delaware for a building or a river improvement or a bridge, but then these items are founded on the bed rock of votes, votes for the man who gets one of them through, and votes for him from other members whom he helps out with his own. So there are two or three public improvement projects, carried by the big omnibus appropriation bills popularly styled "pork barrels," and these are the District items and all others.

All the District items have been stricken out of the general public building bill this session by the blue pencil of the Speaker. Will not some of the good friends of the national capital who know the local needs, forget for the moment that there is no trading basis in this case and vote the meritorious paragraphs back into the bill? The service will be very highly appreciated.

Pistol "Justice."

Circumstances which in the minds of some people justify the crime of Harry Thaw, who last night killed one of the most prominent architects in this country, may yet be disclosed, but there can be no question that to a majority of men and women today there is but one side to a case. The murder of Stanford White, whatever he might have done, whatever may have been his relations or attitude to Thaw's wife, was a cold-blooded crime, against his family and against society.

In some latitudes private justice is condoned when a man's so-called "honor" is involved. In certain parts of the world, honor is deemed by the "code," by the invocation of the "unwritten law," and the slayer is only thereby rehabilitated in his social standing. But, fortunately for the world, the drift of sentiment in these times is away from this method of adjustment. Society has provided ways and means by law for the settlement of differences and the punishment of wrongs.

In the light of the new code, which is the code of public security and is based on the doctrine of giving everybody a chance for his life, nothing can justify the killing of a man by unprovoked assault when the slayer's life is in no sense or degree in danger. The spectacle of a man walking deliberately up to another in a public resort, and before his victim has had warning of his approach, shooting him in the back and then finishing his work with a bullet through the brain is calculated to lower the theory of personal vengeance further into disrepute. In the rough places, on the edges of civilization, where men all go armed and safety rests mainly with the man with the quickest "draw" and the surest aim, the "code" deprecates a shot in the back. There is honor even among homicides. The slayer who lives up to the rules of the game approaches his victim from the front and draws his weapon openly. There is no advantage for the man who kills wantonly without running his own chance of injury.

But in any case, the killing of Stanford White, even though he may have been a villain, was the worst imaginable way for young Thaw to punish him for his actions. The courts were open for proceedings which would have been a greater punishment to White than death if he had been guilty of wrongdoing. All right-thinking men would have respected Thaw in invoking such processes to put a stop to insults or persecutions or menaces. Today the verdict of good citizens is that his crime is despicable and worthy of the utmost punishment, whatever may have been his moral provocation.

Americans Abroad.

America is on good terms with the nations. There could be no better evidence of this than the attention shown to distinguished American citizens traveling abroad. Mr. and Mrs. Longworth are well received wherever they go, as are Mr. and Mrs. Bryan. The former have sat at table with the King of England and the German Emperor, while the latter have witnessed the coronation of a king and a queen in Norway almost as special guests. Subsequently Mr. Bryan by invitation addressed a public meeting in the Norwegian capital, and was enthusiastically applauded. A few years ago there would have been an outcry against this, as out of line with republican simplicity. Today such an outcry would be laughed at in intelligent circles. We are complimented as a nation by such manifestations of respect and interest bestowed by the rulers and high officials of other countries upon those representing the best citizenship and influences of our country.

A St. Louis judge has ruled that a trust is in the same category as a gambler, and that a man who owes money to one of them may with impunity "wedge" on his debt. This is probably based on the theory that a trust has the "sure thing" end of the transaction.

The douma probably breathes easier now that one of the czar's regiments has refused to go on duty in St. Petersburg until assured that the lower house is not to be coerced by military force.

Five ice trust officials were sentenced to pay heavy fines and to spend a year each in prison in Toledo, Ohio. The refrain of a once popular song is easily answered in the negative now.

It cost the United States $100,000 to bring Greene and Gaylor to trial, but Americans who have a proper regard for the law will not begrudge the money.

If any important business is left unfinished at this session the country may be disposed to remind Congress that nobody asked it to adjourn.

Young Mr. Thaw's faculty for getting himself into hot water suggests that there is something in a name, after all.

A railroad grade crossing is a deadly menace at any time. When it causes a death it becomes a criminal nuisance.

The crazily driven hospital ambulance is as much of a public nuisance as the scorching automobile.

Tariff Revision.

The republican situation in Iowa is not fully appraised unless we consider the deliverances of the standpatters made within the past twelve months. Tariff revision? There is a particularly benevolent and liberal mood. No District man is on the floor to offer his vote for the New York building, or the Delaware bridge or the Iowa river survey in exchange for a local park or building or other project. The lobbyists of the two houses may be well filled with anxious citizens of Washington, with arguments and statistics, showing the need and the justice of a contemplated improvement, and committees may give solemn hearings to the advocates of the various works called for by the growth of the federal District. But even when they are gratified by the writing of these items into the bills they are apt to be later disappointed by their total elimination. There is no one to stand sponsor for them on the floor. The little deals and combinations of the log-rollers are protected by their assistants. They have no goods to deliver. However, justice will prevail in the end.

However, justice will prevail in the end.

much to produce. And yet, Gov. Cummins finds support all over the state. It even looks as if he might win. But should he lose the nomination he will have demonstrated that tariff revision in a section strongly republican is a demand so emphatic that it must be reckoned with in all calculations for the near future.

If we turn from Iowa we come to Massachusetts, another republican stronghold where tariff revision is a shibboleth. The republicans of the Bay state elected last year's ticket on that issue, and are preparing to use it in this year's contest. They are pretty good republicans—none better. Mr. Lodge, who is at their head, is the President's friend in the Senate, and Gov. Guild, who will be asking Indorsement, is likewise on intimate terms at the White House. But Secretary Shaw asks the public to believe that because the President has not in any message to Congress urged tariff revision he is a standpatter! Tariff revision is on the way, and not far away. It is coming like a sidewheel steamboat, running down stream on the bosom of the great river. And in the hands of the party of protection revision no more menacing protection than the horticultural menaces trees when he clips their superfluous branches.

A Paris newspaper correspondent was so persistent in trying to interview John D. Rockefeller that the oil king had to hire a cab to escape. Maybe this was one of the oil king's contributions as a member of the Newspaper Humorists' Association.

How many more demonstrations will be needed to convince the municipal authorities that electric bell signals at suburban grade crossings do not safeguard human life?

If the Missouri doctrine that a trust, being a part of the law, has no standing in court is finally affirmed, there will be little difficulty in solving the monopoly problem.

Ida M. Tarbell and Upton Sinclair ought to do a vaudeville sketch entitled "How We Swatted the Trusts With a Muck Rake."

SHOOTING STARS.

Helpful.

"What books have helped you most?" inquired the literary girl.

"Well," answered the wholly mercenary author; "I must confess that I never succeeded in drawing royalties from any except my own."

A Harsh Estimate.

"He is an accomplished linguist," said the admiring friend.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "He is one of those people who speak many languages but never think anything worth saying in any of them."

A Stage.

All the world's a stage, they say; For each a part is set. And when mosquitoes start this way We play behind a net.

No Competition.

"What reasons have you for objecting to my suit for your daughter's hand?"

"You will not be able to support her in the style to which she has been accustomed."

"My dear sir," was the suave reply, "your success in that direction has been so complete that I should not presume to make any effort to excel it."

A Strange Excuse.

"Bingle will never make a great political," said one member of Congress.

"Why not?" asked the other.

"He refused to ask for a public building for his city on the ground that he did not think it was needed."

In Storage.

Up in the weather bureau, In a corner dark and dim, The blizzard is reposing That was once so bold and grim. They've wrapped it up with moth balls And it's laid away with care, For it's wholly out of season, When the summer's in the air.

Last winter 'twould have shocked us Remarkably, to know The time would ever come when we Could miss a blizzard so! They keep it in seclusion When it ought to be of use— Please take a little corner off Right now and turn it loose!

Militia Encampments.

From the Baltimore American.

Appeals to business men to allow employees who are members of the national guard the vacation necessary for participation in the Mount Gretna encampment ought not to be necessary. Any man with patriotic instincts will regard this as a duty which should be performed cheerfully. In this country comparatively few demands are made upon citizens in the direction of maintaining the efficiency of the army, and co-operation with soldiers who enroll in the militia and get the benefit of the physical and martial training it affords is a slight tribute to pay to the cause of national security.

It sounds very nice to boast that when the time of danger comes raw farmer lads can be found who will cope with any athlete team at the University of Kansas! What would the men who founded Lawrence and who first climbed Mount Oread think of that? What of a superior of regular over state troops in the events succeeding the latter catastrophe proves that too little attention is paid to the old-time development along practical lines. The federal government offers the states opportunity to have the militia become familiar with the real work of soldiers, by contact with the regular troops, and contributes liberally to the equipment of the militia. To neglect this opportunity would be unwise and unpatriotic.

Time's Changes in Kansas.

From the Topeka State Journal.

Shade of John Brown! No colored man need apply for a place on any athlete team at the University of Kansas! What would the men who founded Lawrence and who first climbed Mount Oread think of that? What of a superior of regular over state troops in the events succeeding the latter catastrophe proves that too little attention is paid to the old-time development along practical lines. The federal government offers the states opportunity to have the militia become familiar with the real work of soldiers, by contact with the regular troops, and contributes liberally to the equipment of the militia. To neglect this opportunity would be unwise and unpatriotic.

Something Really Useful.

From the Boston Globe.

Couldn't the Carnegie simplified spelling committee be induced to provide some graceful substitute for that awkward phrase, "The engagement is announced?"

French Divorce.

From the New York Evening Sun.

The new French divorce bill proposes to make the tying of the knot by any athlete team at the University of Kansas! What would the men who founded Lawrence and who first climbed Mount Oread think of that? What of a superior of regular over state troops in the events succeeding the latter catastrophe proves that too little attention is paid to the old-time development along practical lines. The federal government offers the states opportunity to have the militia become familiar with the real work of soldiers, by contact with the regular troops, and contributes liberally to the equipment of the militia. To neglect this opportunity would be unwise and unpatriotic.

Name!

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Grover Cleveland boasts that he never had a manuscript rejected by a publisher. Grover ought to try to write something incog.
